The blue whale (Balaenoptera musculus) is the largest animal on earth and the largest animal in the history of the earth. They are 25 meters long on average and weigh nearly 150 tons, which is equivalent to the total weight of 30 elephants. The heart of a blue whale weighs 180 kilograms, and the diameter of the aorta is more than 23 centimeters, which can accommodate a child. The back of a blue whale is almost all dark blue, with white spots on the sides of the body; the abdomen is light gray with wrinkles. They mainly feed on krill and consume up to 2-5 tons of food every day. Blue whales are distributed in all oceans around the world, including the North Pacific, North Atlantic, Indian Ocean and Antarctic waters. They have also been recorded in the Yellow Sea and East China Sea in China. The blue whale is one of the important economic species, but its number has dropped sharply due to overhunting. In 1966, the International Whaling Commission announced that the blue whale was a protected object that was banned from hunting. At present, the blue whale is listed as an endangered species and is protected by the international community.
